AMUSEMENT NOTES.

Moving Pictures This Afternoon and Evening at Opera House.

At the opera house this afternoon and evening, besides the regular six-reel program, a two-reel Chaplin comedy, "His Trysting Place," has been added, making an eight-reel program. This picture is said to be one of the very best of the Chaplin comedies and is sure to make you laugh, if you have a laugh in you. The matinee begins at 2:30 and the first show at night at 6:45, second show at 8:30.—Adv.

Ever since the time of Eve in the Garden of Eden there have been good women and bad women, just as there will always be good and bad men. Kipling, in his poem, "The Vampire," depicts the fallacies of a fool, who prays to "a rug and a bone and a hank of hair" and insults the members of the fair sex in every land. But he leaves food for thought, for the fool, fascinated by the woman, could not see her faults but called her "this lady fair." Fool that he was, he was no bigger fool than hundreds of other men who become fascinated by the personality of the wrong type of woman.

"A Fool There Was," which will be presented at the opera house on Tuesday, Aug. 24, puts the lesson on the stage. The play is by Porter Emerson Browne, and was suggested by Kipling's "The Vampire" poem. The play is well written and well played and strongly indicates the almost superhuman power of a woman over a man. It has been said that a good woman can lead a man into heaven, or a bad one can lead him to hell. So skillfully is the play presented by the present company that this point—that of the bad woman—is emphasized with telling force. Like many of Kipling's poems, the play leaves a depressing influence in the mind, but on the other hand, it preaches a powerful sermon on the man who allows himself to become the fool of the "vampire" woman. There is brilliancy despite its undercurrent of gloom, that is fascinating, and it is the interest in a piece made famous by Robert Hillard that packs the theatres at every performance of "A Fool There Was."—Adv.

Rather Serious Blunder.

A Boston man was on his way West on important business. In the opposite section of the Pullman sat a sweet-faced, tired-looking woman with four small children. Being fond of children, and feeling sorry for the mother, the Bostonian soon made friends with the kiddies.

Early the next morning he heard their eager questions and the patient "Yes, dear," of the mother, as she tried to dress them; and, looking out, he saw a small, white foot protruding beyond the opposite curtain. Reaching across the aisle, he took hold of the large toe and began to rectify:

"This little pig went to market; this little pig stayed home; this little pig had roast beef; this little pig had none; this little pig cried, 'Wee! wee! I all the way home.'"

The foot was suddenly withdrawn, and a cold, quiet voice—that of the mother—said, "That is quite sufficient, thank you."—Harper's Magazine.
